

Tell Me Again

When the words of he who made me blind
Come back to punish me again,
I feel myself fall deeper in sorrow,
A familiar, but unwelcome friend.

The lies I've heard for too many years
I thought were conquered and gone.
But the evil one who brings me down,
Will repeat the words like a song.

He reminds me of my mistakes and guilt,
And makes me re-live my past.
He distorts the image I see in the mirror,
Until all I see is shattered glass.

Just when I fear I've reached the end
A familiar whisper is spoken.
"My child, I'm here, just as before,
When at first your heart was broken.

I've told you before and I'll tell you again
The day you called My Name,
I covered your heart and soul with My blood
And removed your guilt and shame.

The enemy will always be seeking a soul
That is weary and weak and lost.
But I sealed you as Mine, and I'll say it again,
Your sins, into the depths are tossed.

Weep no more for the day is new!
It's this song I want you to sing.
Move on, go forward, share in My love,
For My child, again, you're redeemed."

LJH 1/26/2013 ©